And clangs the bell for me." "And you're not afraid," I saked, That there may be a sad mishap, And he no wise to blame!

A pallor crept into her cheeks, Her red lips ourled in pain; They parted, then serenely smiled. Her heart was brave again. "God watches over us," she said,

"And he knows what is best; So we have but to pray and trust, And leave to him the rest."

How great that childish faith of hers: It made my own seem weak; I bent my head, with throbbing heart And kissed her on the cheek.

I said to her in cheery tone; "God bless you, Bonnis Beas God bless your mother and the man Who runs the night express!"

AN AFFECTING INCIDENT.

At that awful period when the English nation was convulsed with civil discord, and Cromwell with his partisans were contending against the scattered forces of the king, William Mortimer, a young and zealous loyalist, used every exertion to forward the success of his lawful monarch. The attempt, however, was frustrated by means of the various passes being so well guarded by soldiers, who were everywhere eager for his son. Not dismayed at this unexpected failure, they traveled by night (hiding themselves in marshes and among the river reeds in the The ORANGE JUDD FARMER daytime,) and, with much peril and exertion, contrived to reach Monmouth. Here they soon perceived that it was impossible for them to remain long without being discovered; and Mortimer, having arranged his plans accordingly, seized a little boat on the banks of the Whe, and covering the king with the bark of trees, suffered the vessel, during the night, to be carried down by the current till it reached a range they landed, and, letting the boat

These expectations were, in a great measure, disappointed. The royalists in general were not aware of their king's approach, and the Scotch, on whose help he confidingly relied, were deterred from uniting with them unless they from uniting with them unless they from uniting with them unless they previously subscribed to the coverant.

In this posture of affairs Charles encamped at Worcester, and was compelled to hazard that fatal battle, the result of which is so well known. Mortimer was one of the few who, escaping from the field, accompanied the king in his flight;

He saw the light of their torches glaring among caverns, and heard the cliffs re-echo the howling of the wolf-dogs as they forded the river and climbed the precipices in the eager pursuit of their prey. He attempted to retreat, but in vain; the monsters of death were already fast approachig, and after a short but desperate struggle he sank down, bleeding and exhausted, under their greedy fangs. The pursuers called off their dogs in order to save his life, that they might extort from him a confession of the king's retreat. They succeded in muzzling the ferocious animals, but when they lifted their victim from the blood-stained sward where he had fallen, they found him stiff and cold in the arms of death; they passed their torches before his face, but his eyes were forever closed. Even the barbarians themselves, when they looked upon his wellproportioned limbs and saw his fine and manly countence, beautiful in death, cursed the cause that betrayed from their allegiance, and compelled them to the commission of a crime, at which their hearts now shudder-

She hastened towards the spot of her lover's retreat, anxious for his safety and yet scarcely daring to proceed. It was in the month of October; the morning was chilly and cold, the dew drops were lying thick upon the lank blades of grass. and a gray mist was rising from the earth which partly obscured the distant objects. She ventured onward, invoking heaven for the safety of her lover, when suddenly turning her eyes to the ground, she saw the object of all her solicitude lying on a cold bed of turf before her.

He who had often hailed the sound of her footsteps was now heedless of her appoach; his cheek, with her pure kisses, felt not now her pure and delicate lips as they feed greedily upon the death damps of his face. She passed her white fingers over his brow, and when she saw them smeared with the unnatural stain of lived gore, she laughed in the delirium of her despair, till the sound of the mountain echoes mocking her tone of misery, awoke her to the burning, realizing sense of her soul's agony. A fisherman who had witnessed the scene at this moment approached the spot. She looked wildly round and motioned him away, but when she saw him still advancing towards her she uttered a piercing shriek, and in a few moments was on the summit of an adjoining precipice. She waved her white arms as in triumph, and then sinking upon her knees at the utmost verge of the o'erhanging brow, she crossed her hands over her face, and instantly bending forward she sank into the dell below. Such was the aerial delicacy of her form that not a bone or limb was broken, and nothing but the absence of breathing indicated the calm triumph of death. The unfortunate lovers were buried in one grave, and nothing is left to perpetuate their memory but the imperishable cliff, which rises, like the Genius of History over the spot, to consecrate their eternal fame.

Felisty's Romance.

Jenkinson Wipedunks would not have changed situations with the Prince of Wales, or the drum-major of a brass band.

Felisty McGinnis had answered Yes" in a voice as soft and gentle as the sigh of music in dreamless sleep or the murmuring wail of a caressing breeze from lethean waters soothingly fanning the whiskers of Father Time.

"Felisty," he exclaimed rapturously, as his left hand and arm disappeared from sight with a rapid motion towards the back of the sofa on which they sat, and the fingers of the right hand appeared to be feeling for something in his waistcoat pocket, "you have made me the happiest man in the world."

A STRANGE CASE.

How an Enemy was Foiled.

The following graphic statement will be read with intense interest: "I cannot describe the numb, creepy sensation that existed in my arms, hands and legs. I had to rub and beas those parts until they were sore, to overcome in a mensure the dead feeling that had taken possession of them. In addition, I had a strange weakness in my back and around my walst, together with an indescribable 'gone' feeling in my stomach. Physicians said it was creeping paralysis, from which, according to their universal conclusion, there is no relate. Once it fastens upon a person, they say, it continues its insidious progress until it reaches a vital point and the sufferer dies. Such was my prospect. I had been doctoring a year and a half steadily, but with no particular henefit, when I saw an advertisement of lir Miles' Restorative Nervine, procured a bottle and began using it. Marvelous as it may seem, but a few days had passed before every bit of that creepy feeling had left me, and there has not been even the slightest indication of its return. I now feel as well as I ever did, and have gained ten pounds in weight, though I had run down from 170 to 137. Four others have used Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine on my recomendation, and it has been as satisfactory in their cases as in mine."—James Kane, La Rue, O. Br. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all drugglets on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles' Medical Co., Ekhat, Ind., on receipt of price, 51 per bottle, siz bottles for $5, express prepaid. What He Was.

A young lawyer in South Carolina started out to make his speech in a hot political campaign with the idea of remaining neutral as to parties and names. He had been told by his friends that in speaking he must raise his voice so as to be distinctly heard by the whole crowd In order to do that he must select some person on the outer edge of his audience and address himself to him. The young lawyer started out in his first speech under this advice with non-committal ideas. It was a hot day. As he mounted the stand he pulled off his coat and Nervo collar, rolled up his sleeves, and began thus: "Fellow citizens, I am no Democrat; fellow citizens, I am no Democrat; fellow citizens, I am no Republican; fellow citizens, I am no Third Party man." to any address for $1 each, or at every $5 order we give write to cure or refund the money.) am no Third Party man." am no Third Party man."

At this moment he remembered the instructions about selecting man on the outskirts of the crowd and seeing an old gentleman come up on the outer edge and take his seat on an old log the young lawyer with great emphasis pointed his finger at the old man and roared out in stentorian voice, "Fellow citizens, then what am I?"

The old fellow, thinking the question addressed to him, replied, "You are a garl dausted fool!"

Can't Miss a Rattlesnake.

The writer saw an Indian kill a rattlesnake in a very peculiar manner recently. The rattler was about ten feet from the Indian, who was resting the rifle on his knee, apparently taking aim.

Whenever he moved the weapon a few inches the snake would move around and get exactly in line with it. Then to show how the thing
